Managing in VUCA environments

The environment experiences changes that are disruptive and unpredictable in their speed and magnitude

The environment offers too little information to make complex decisions

The environment is dynamic, with many interrelated moving parts

The environment is underspecified, with information that can be interpreted in many ways

● Volatility.

● Uncertainty.

● Complexity.

● Ambiguity.

Keys for leading in VUCA environments

Volatility – improve decision-speed; focus on learning and capacity building, regularly prepare for disruptions

Uncertainty – focus on gathering new information; reflect on experiences of successfully working through uncertainty

Complexity – improve communication, collaboration and coordination; identify people with key strengths

Ambiguity – create clarity, make time to learn lessons from experience

Stephen Covey

Stephen Covey put forward the idea that greater personal effectiveness is maximized not by managing time, but by managing yourself.

Overview of Covey's 7 Habits

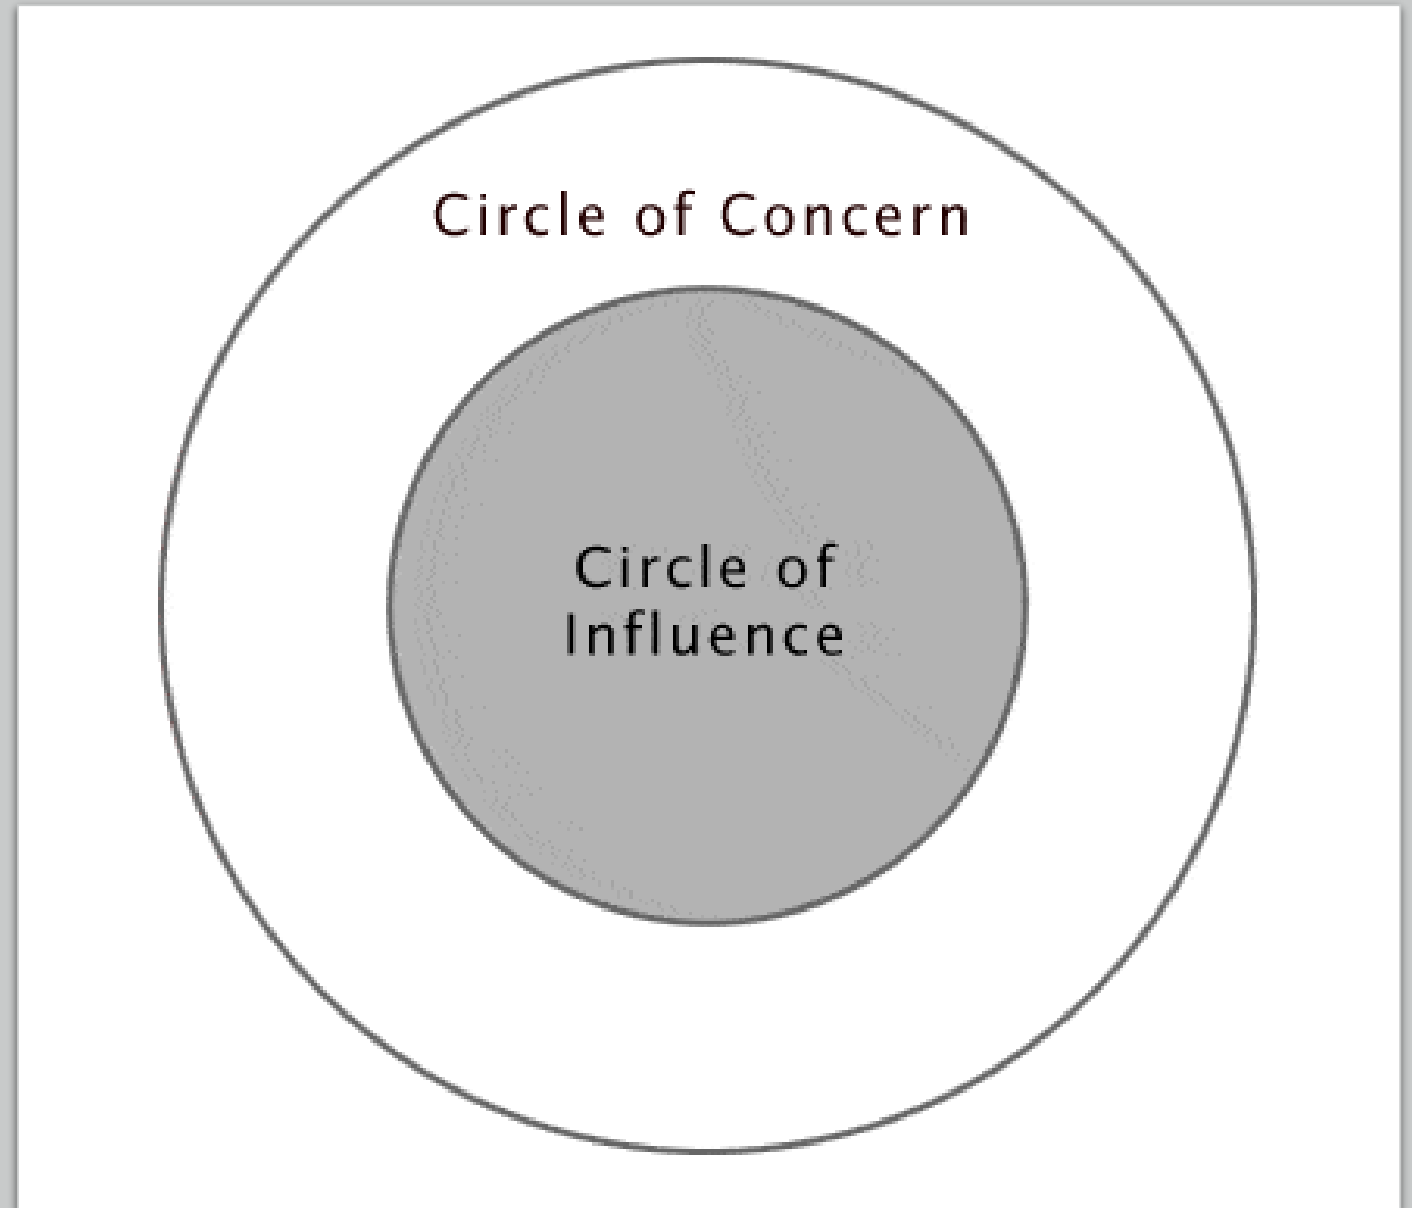

- Habit 1: Be Proactive (not reactive)
- Habit 2: Begin with the End in Mind (identify your goal)
- Habit 3: Put First Things First (learn to prioritize)
- Habit 4: Think Win-Win (find benefits for both parties)
- Habit 5: Seek First to Understand (listen to the other person, be empathic)
- Habit 6: Synergize (value differences among people)
- Habit 7: Sharpen the Saw (constantly seek to improve yourself, physically and mentally)

Covey's Habit 1: Be proactive

- More than taking initiative.
- Focus on the things you can control (versus can't).
- Proactive people focus on issues of influence.

Covey Habit 2: Begin with the end in mind

- All things are created twice (in your mind and in reality).
- For each task or project, begin with a clear vision of your desired direction.
- This involves a personal mission statement (what you want to be and do), based on your principles.

Covey's Habit 3: Put First Things First

Organizing and managing time according to the personal priorities established in habit 2.
